Teeming with life, the deserts of southern Africa provide habitats for a staggering array of plant and animal species, from the tiniest succulent to the largest land mammal. How do these life forms cope with scarce resources and unpredictable rainfall? How do they protect themselves against predators? And what is the impact of climate change on them and their habitats? In answering these and other questions, Barry Lovegrove uncovers many of the mysteries of desert life and explains how and why such a great diversity of plants, insects, mammals, reptiles and birds successfully exist in southern Africa's four arid biomes. Superb photographs, maps and explanatory diagrams illustrate the text.
